

EDITOR'S ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

THANK YOU FIRST to Cathy Sewell (1962-2001), respected Aboriginal educator, singer, dancer, actor, writer, and role model. In 2000, Cathy attended the conference "Natives and Settlers Now and Then" at the University of Alberta and was the first to encourage this book by asking afterwards how soon a printed version would be available to read for those who couldn't attend. This publication is in honour of Cathy's courage, spirit, and commitment to Aboriginal peoples through her work at Aboriginal Student Services, University of Alberta, and beyond.

My thanks to Nancy Van Styvendale for transcribing the recordings of the original presentations, questions, and discussions; to Kelly Burns, for research assistance at various stages; and to Andrea Siemens, who transcribed my interview on treaty-making with Omushkego ("Swampy Cree") historian Louis Bird, which I cite in the introduction. I am grateful to Jonathan Hart, who encouraged this project and generously shared his knowledge and experience. The University of Minnesota Press gave permission to print Patricia Seed's work, part of which appears in American Pentimento: The Pursuit of Riches and the Invention of "Indians" (2001). Thank you to the anonymous readers of the manuscript, and to Anne Lindsay and James Sinclair, for suggestions on earlier drafts. Alethea Adair, Linda Cameron, Cathie Crooks, Peter Midgley, Mary Mahoney-Robson, and others at the University of Alberta Press gave efficient, professional assistance and much encouragement throughout. A warm thank you to Leslie Robertson for her careful eye and intelligent copyediting work on this project. Erin McGregor, researcher at the Metis Archival Project, helped with several digital images. The research used in my introduction was funded over the years by the Six Nations of the Grand River

Post Secondary Education Office, the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada, and the Canada-U.S. Fulbright Program. My work on the project was completed with support from the University of Winnipeg, including a research leave in summer/fall 2006.

The book's progress was delayed somewhat by the illness and then, sadly, the passing, on June 3, 2005, of one of its contributors, Dr. Harold Cardinal, the day after he had received formal notification that he had earned his Doctorate of Laws degree from the University of British Columbia. I would like to thank Dr. Maisie Cardinal and family for permission to include the draft that Harold was working on until he became too ill to work. Dr. Cardinal was a path-breaking and wise leader called upon by many for his experience and expertise; his contributions to Aboriginal politics, law, and understanding between peoples in Canada will continue to have an effect, as will his life's work for the recognition of the spirit and intent of the treaties. The contributors to this volume were deeply saddened by Dr. Cardinal's passing and wanted to write a few words about him as a small way of acknowledging his contributions. These statements appear in "Remembering Harold Cardinal" near the end of this book.

To Doris Wolf and our children, Claire and Simon, thank you for your love and support along this and other journeys.

And finally, my appreciation to the contributors for their hard work, their dedication to this book despite several delays, and for their patience and good humour while working with me, a non-expert in some of the areas addressed: it was a pleasure to work with and learn from you all.

Paul DePasquale

UNIVERSITY OF WINNIPEG

September 30, 2006