

Contributors

DOUGLAS BAILIE is a PhD candidate in the Department of History and Classics at the University of Alberta. His area of interest is the history of popular culture in Canada, and he has published in Prairie Forum.

SUSAN CRAWFORD completed her BA in History, with a minor in Anthropology, at the University of Alberta in 1997. She now works as a production coordinator in the film and television industry in Vancouver.

BORIS DEWIEL is a doctoral candidate in political science at the University of Calgary. Among his publications are "The Politics of Ideological Diversity" in Roger Gibbins et al, Mindscales: Political Ideologies Toward the 21st Century (Toronto: McGraw-Hill Ryerson, 1996), and articles on multiculturalism and environmental science. He is the holder of numerous awards and fellowships, including most recently a SSHRC Doctoral Fellowship (1996-1998). He served on the CBC Ombudsman's Independent Advice Panel reviewing the CBC's coverage of the 1997 federal election campaign. His dissertation, entitled "Democracy as Diversity: Civil Society, Pluralism and the Limits of the State," will be completed in 1998.

AMAL GHAZAL is a master's student in the Department of History and Classics at the University of Alberta. She studied previously at the American University of Beirut, and is currently a member of the committee of the Consortium for Middle Eastern and African Studies, University of Alberta. Her current research concerns the religious debate between Sufism and Salafism during the reign of the Ottoman Sultan Abd al-Hamid II.

JAYMIE HEILMAN is a fourth-year honours student at the University of Alberta. She intends to pursue graduate studies in the field of post-colonial Latin American social history.

TRACY PELLAND is a PhD student in history at the University of Alberta. His main areas of interest are historiography, theory, and prairie culture and identity.

ROBERT STACK is a law student at the University of Victoria. He completed his Master's in History in 1995 at the University of Saskatchewan. His interests are modern Germany, late-nineteenth century intellectual history, and antisemitism. Last year he published an article on the German antisemite Otto Böckel in the compilation Changing the Climate.