

Contributors

DOUGLAS BAILIE is a PhD candidate in the Department of History and Classics at the University of Alberta. His area of interest is the history of popular culture in Canada, and he has published in Prairie Forum.

PHILIP BRAVO is completing his MA at the University of Manitoba. He was born in Portugal and was raised in Winnipeg. His main areas of research are nationalism and imperialism particularly in South Asia, theories of history and postcolonial theory.

MIRIAM KOENE is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Political Science at the University of Alberta. Her dissertation is on Canadian federal political parties. She holds a BA from the University of Toronto and an MA from Dalhousie University.

TAMMY NEMETH is a PhD student at the University of British Columbia where she is pursuing research in Canadian contemporary history. She received her BA Honours from the University of Regina. Her honours thesis was on the development of Reformation theology. In 1997, she received her MA in History at the University of Alberta. The article presented here is taken from her thesis. She was chosen to represent the Department of History and Classics (U of A) at the Greyhound Lecture Series at the University of Calgary in the spring of 1997 where she presented an earlier version of this article.

CARLOS F. NOREÑA is a PhD candidate in the Graduate Group in Ancient History at the University of Pennsylvania. He received his BA in History with High Honors from University of California at Berkeley in 1993, and his MA in Ancient History from the University of Pennsylvania in 1997. He is currently preparing his doctoral dissertation on Roman imperial imagery and ideology, under the supervision of Brent D. Shaw. His main interests are in the political and social history of the Roman empire, but he also works on the social history of classical Greece.

TRACY PELLAND is a PhD student in history at the University of Alberta. His main areas of interest are historiography, theory, and prairie culture and identity.

ROBYNNE ROGERS HEALEY is a PhD candidate in the Department of History and Classics at the University of Alberta. She has taught courses there in both American and Canadian women's history. Her current project examines women and the family in early Upper Canada.

HELEN ROOS is a PhD student at the University of Ottawa. She received her MA from the University of Western Ontario. Her thesis was titled "It Happened as if Overnight: The Expropriation and Relocation of Stoney Point Reserve #43, 1942." She has contributed an article on land claims in southwestern Ontario for the upcoming CD-Rom textbook Canada: Confederation to Present. An article on gender division of labour in wampum production among Coastal Algonquian bands for Ethnohistory is also forthcoming.

PAMELA STANTON completed her undergraduate and Master's degrees at the University of Calgary in 1991 and 1993. Her MA thesis explored the topic of double monasticism. She is currently a PhD candidate at the University of Alberta, working in the areas of English early modern history and women's history with emphases on religion.