

Acknowledgements

The final polished version of Constellations represents only 'the tip of the iceberg' in terms of the effort and time taken by all its contributors to make this issue possible. Over twenty-five students were involved in the making of Constellations, not to mention the professors and members of the Department of History and Classics who provide continual support. We would like to take the time here to recognize those who have supported Constellations in its second year. Thanks first of all to the authors whose submissions compose this issue. Your original work gives Constellations its substance, affording both reviewers and readers the privilege of engaging with your original research. Reviewers deserve a big thank-you for time spent providing feedback to the authors. The attention to detail and quality of comments gave submissions the attention and consideration they deserved and allowed authors an opportunity to enhance their work even further. Intellectual exchanges between authors and reviewers represent only the beginning of possibilities for Constellations as a forum of student work.

A special thanks is extended to Melanie Marvin whose creative input and ready advice continue to move Constellations to the next stage of its development. The Department of History and Classics deserves recognition for continually supporting and facilitating Constellations' endeavours. Thanks to the professors who go the extra mile in encouragement of your students' work. We are honoured to have a place in your classroom. Thanks to assistant editor Noor Iqbal whose dedication, insight, and creative input have provided invaluable support to the administration and development of this issue. We would like to express our appreciation of journal advisor Dr. Jeremy Caradonna whose constant commitment to the potential of Constellations motivates us to continually revise and rework the journal to better facilitate intellectual exchange.

We appreciate the time and support given by you, the reader. It is our hope that this issue will both challenge and interest you as you read and consider. We extend to you our sincerest thank you for the very valuable time you have given Constellations and all those who worked to make it possible.

Emily Larocque
December 2010
Editor of Constellations