

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank Drs. Dennis Sweeney and Frances Swyripa for their advice and counsel during the process that brought this edition to term. The organizers of the 2011 History and Classics Graduate Student Association's Conference, Tristan Ellenberger and Crystal Fraser, invited me to speak to conference participants about the journal and to solicit manuscripts. I thank them for the opportunity. I sincerely appreciate the patience, generosity and industry of this edition's contributors as we worked through the editorial process. I tip my hat in deference to the anonymous reviewers, whose time and efforts are valued greatly and whose feedback undoubtedly improved this edition's articles. I also thank the Department of History and Classics at the University of Alberta for their continued financial support of this journal. The publishing world is an integral and, yes, intimidating component of the academic experience; scholarly venues geared solely to the support of aspiring and engaged graduate students and the dissemination of their work are of crucial importance. Finally, I thank our office's 'administrator extraordinaire,' Melanie Marvin, for her management of the journal's website.
