

Contributors

Michael Commito is a doctoral candidate in the Department of History at McMaster University. His dissertation focuses on the history of black bear hunting and management in Ontario from 1892 to 1999. He is interested in how various groups in the province, such as biologists, policy-makers and the lay public, viewed the animals and how and why this perspective has changed over time. He can be contacted at commitma@mcmaster.ca.

Chris Elcock is a doctoral student at the University of Saskatchewan. His main area of research is the history of LSD and psychedelics in North America. His dissertation will examine LSD use in New York City from the 1950s onward. He can be contacted at cce188@mail.usask.ca.

Kirk W. Goodlet is a PhD candidate in the Department of History at the University of Waterloo, Canada. His work can also be found in the Journal of Historical Sociology and Ontario History. He is also a research associate at the Laurier Centre for Military Strategic Disarmament Studies (LCMSDS). He can be contacted at kgoodlet@uwaterloo.ca.

Mark Leeming is a graduate student at Dalhousie University. He can be contacted at leeming@dal.ca.

Greg Marchand completed a Bachelor of Arts Honours degree at the University of Ottawa, in History with a minor in Political Science, in 2011. He is currently completing his Master of Arts in History at the University of Manitoba. He can be contacted at marchang@umanitoba.ca.

Alin Mocanu finished a BA in Classics at the Université de Montréal in 2011 and he is presently pursuing, at McGill University, an MA in Latin literature. His current research interest focuses on generic mixing in Latin love elegy and the role of intertextuality and intermediality in textual analysis. He can be contacted at alinus.dacicus@yahoo.com.

Robert Nathan is a doctoral candidate in African History at Dalhousie University. His principal research interests concern Malian postcolonial politics and Francophone African literature. His work has recently appeared in The Journal of African Cultural Studies, The University of Toronto Quarterly, and The African Historical Review. He can be contacted at robert.nathan@dal.ca.

Matthew Scarborough holds B.A. (2009, 1st Class Hons.) and M.A. (2011) degrees in Classical Languages from the University of Alberta where he studied Latin, Greek, and Indo-Iranian philology and linguistics. He is currently a Ph.D. Candidate in Classical Philology and Indo-European Linguistics at Darwin College, University of Cambridge and is currently researching the Aeolic dialects of Ancient Greek. He can be contacted at mjcs2@cam.ac.uk.

Christopher Thrasher earned his PhD from Texas Tech University in 2012. His studies emphasized the history of masculinity and violence in America. He currently serves as an Assistant Professor of History at the New Mexico Military Institute. His dissertation titled "A Saving Touch of Barbarism: Fight Sports in America 1619 - 2005" seeks to explain how shifting gendered and nationalistic identities shaped fight sports in the United States. His next book project is tentatively titled "The Last Ride." This monograph will explore how ordinary people experienced the Mexican Punitive Expedition of 1916 – 1917, the last major campaign of the American horse cavalry. He can be contacted at thrasher@nmmi.edu.

Jeff Washburn is a graduate student at the University of Idaho. He can be contacted at jwashburn@vandals.uidaho.edu.

Nathan Andrew Wilson is a History Ph.D. candidate at York University in Toronto. He is currently finishing a dissertation that explores the reasons why some American and West German gay and lesbian activists deployed Holocaust and Nazi symbolic vocabulary and visual imagery in the Cold War era. He is also co-editing a collection of articles about Western reaction to Kristallnacht—the Nazi state-sponsored pogrom against the Jews that occurred in November 1938. In addition, he is a sessional instructor at both OCAD University in Toronto and Durham College in Oshawa, Ontario. He can be contacted at nathanw@yorku.ca. He can be contacted at nathanw@york.ca.